With the release of this issue, the Sri Lanka Journal of Food and Agriculture (SLJFA) completes its first three years of service to the global scientific community. The Sri Lanka Council for Agricultural Research Policy (SLCARP) of the Ministry of Agriculture of Sri Lanka has been instrumental in making this journal a publication platform for outstanding research work in topics of global significance thus, contributing to the advancement of science, novel practical applications and policy level implications.

The large numbers of papers submitted to the registered office of the SLJFA has now provided evidence to the increased acceptance of the journal among the scientific community. Being multidisciplinary in its scope, the journal continues to encourage submission of original contributions of good quality. Further, the SLJFA strives to maintain the highest standards by ensuring a rigorous double-blind review process involving experts in the relevant subject areas.

The Issue 2 of Volume 3 of SLJFA has further upgraded its presentation format providing more value to the accepted research articles thus, ensuring its highest circulation. The editorial board thanks the authors of research papers and paper reviewers for their significant contribution, and staff of the Editorial Office for rendering their services to upgrade the quality of the SLJFA over the years.
