

Editorial

The Issue 1 of the Volume 4 of Sri Lanka Journal of Food and Agriculture (SLJFA) carried seven papers in various fields of study, thus providing a platform for communicating scientific knowledge to a diverse audience. The editorial board of the SLJFA is happy to acknowledge the growing number of papers submitted annually, and more importantly the confidence the authors have kept on the journal for maintaining its scientific quality. The rigorous review process has paid its dividends allowing the editorial board to screen the best out of the research papers submitted in the field of food and agriculture to be published in the journal.

With the focus on providing good readership of the high quality papers published, the Journal has adjusted its format to A4 print, moving out from its original B5 size of publication. The journal also allows online submission at <http://www.slcarp.lk/journal/submission/>. The editorial office has taken every measure to publish the articles within a period of six months from its original submission. We expect the fullest cooperation of the authors in this regard to quickly respond to the queries raised by the reviewers.

We hereby invite the researchers once again to submit their original work to be considered for publications in the SLJFA.
