

Editorial

The greater interest shown by the scientists in Sri Lanka has been an encouragement to continue with the Issue 2 of the Volume 4 of Sri Lanka Journal of Food and Agriculture (SLJFA). The issue carries four full papers and a review in fields of study of common interest and cater to a diverse audience. The editorial board of the SLJFA is happy to acknowledge the growing number of papers submitted annually, and more importantly the confidence the authors have kept on the journal for maintaining its scientific quality. The rigorous review process has allowed the journal to reach the required quality and to screen the best out of the research papers submitted to be published in the journal.

The Journal now published both online and paper formats in A4 size. Papers can be submitted to the through an online platform available at <http://www.slcarp.lk/journal/submission/>. The editorial office has taken every measure to publish the articles within a period of six months from its original submission. We expect the fullest cooperation of the authors in this regard to quickly respond to the queries raised by the reviewers.
